Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1) and (6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Federal Defendants Kevin Washburn, Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs, and Sally Jewell, Secretary of the Department of the Interior (“Department”) submit this Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs’ Complaint in its entirety. The grounds for this motion are set forth in the incorporated memorandum of law. The attached Declaration of Steven Miskinis indicates consultation with Plaintiff in compliance with this Court’s Order of July 9, 2015 (ECF No. 7).

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs – Carol Coghlan Carter, a “next friend” on behalf of two Indian children in the custody of the State of Arizona, and two sets of foster parents – bring a broad challenge to the constitutionality of the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (“ICWA”). They claim that particular provisions of this 37-year-old statute are racially discriminatory, exceed Congress’ authority under the Constitution, and violate associational freedoms under the First Amendment. They also challenge aspects of updated Guidelines recently issued by the Bureau of Indian Affairs (“BIA”) that provide guidance to State courts and agencies implementing ICWA.

Plaintiffs’ suit should be dismissed for two reasons. First, this Court does not have subject-matter jurisdiction, or should decline to exercise its jurisdiction. Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that they have standing to challenge ICWA or the Guidelines, much less that their claims are ripe. They ask this Court to take the remarkable step of invalidating numerous provisions of a long-standing congressional enactment, even though Plaintiffs do not claim that most of these provisions are negatively affecting them. For example, Plaintiffs challenge ICWA’s heightened standard of proof for the termination of the parental rights of an Indian child, but they fail to even allege injury due to the application of this standard. To the extent Plaintiffs claim injuries, their injuries are hypothetical or are not caused by ICWA or the Guidelines: Plaintiffs challenge transfer provisions that have not been applied, adoptive

1 preferences for a child not cleared for adoption, and non-binding Guidelines that one 2 federal court has already determined are not subject to review under the Administrative 3 Procedure Act. Even if subject-matter jurisdiction did exist, however, Plaintiffs cannot 4 maintain their case for failure to supply the Indian children for whom they purport to 5 speak with an adequate next friend, and because, as Plaintiffs appear to concede, their 6 claims are most appropriately heard in state court. See Compl. ¶ 112 (“Child custody 7 proceedings and domestic relations matters are a virtually exclusive province of the 8 States . . . upon which the federal government cannot intrude.”) (internal citation 9 omitted).

10 Second, even if Plaintiffs establish standing, the suit should be dismissed because 11 it fails to state a valid claim for relief. The claim that provisions of ICWA are racially 12 discriminatory is foreclosed by governing Supreme Court precedent, which firmly 13 establishes that classifications based on tribal membership like those in ICWA are 14 political, not racial classifications. Nor does federal law recognize the liberty interests 15 that Plaintiffs propose in support of their due process claims. The Court should also 16 reject, as a matter of law, Plaintiffs’ remarkable assertion that ICWA exceeds Congress’ 17 Indian affairs power under the Constitution – authority that derives both implicitly and 18 explicitly from the Constitution and the inherent powers of federal government, and has 19 been repeatedly described by the Supreme Court as “plenary.” Finally, ICWA does not 20 violate Indian children’s First Amendment associational rights, as their citizenship in a 21 tribe (or affiliation through a parent’s citizenship) is not forced upon them by ICWA.

22 STATUTORY AND REGULATORY BACKGROUND

23 The Indian Child Welfare Act. Congress enacted ICWA, pursuant to its broad 24 constitutional authority over Indian affairs, to address ““the consequences to Indian 25 children, Indian families, and Indian tribes of abusive child welfare practices that 26 resulted in the separation of large numbers of Indian children from their families and 27 tribes through adoption or foster care placement, usually in non-Indian homes.””

28 Adoptive Couple v. Baby Girl, 133 S. Ct. 2552, 2557 (2013) (quoting Miss. Band of 1 Choctaw Indians v. Holyfield, 490 U.S. 30, 32 (1989)). In particular, Congress found 2 “that an alarmingly high percentage of Indian families [were] broken up by the removal, 3 often unwarranted, of their children from them by nontribal public and private agencies” 4 and that the States had “often failed to recognize the essential tribal relations of Indian 5 people and the cultural and social standards prevailing in Indian communities and 6 families.” 25 U.S.C. § 1901(4)-(5); see also Holyfield, 490 U.S. at 32 (noting “that 25 7 to 35% of all Indian children had been separated from their families and placed in 8 adoptive families, foster care, or institutions”).

9 With ICWA, Congress declared “that it is the policy of this Nation to protect the 10 best interests of Indian children and to promote the stability and security of Indian tribes 11 and families.” 25 U.S.C. § 1902. Congress found that “there is no resource that is more 12 vital to the continued existence and integrity of Indian tribes than their children,” id. § 13 1901(3), and thus ICWA both ““seeks to protect the rights of the Indian child as an 14 Indian and the rights of the Indian community and tribe in retaining its children in its 15 society.”” Holyfield, 490 U.S. at 37 (quoting H.R. REP. NO. 95-1386, at 23 (1978)). To 16 accomplish this goal, ICWA “establish[es] . . . minimum Federal standards for the 17 removal of Indian children from their families and the placement of such children in 18 foster or adoptive homes.” Id.

19 ICWA applies to “child custody proceedings” (defined as foster-care placements, 20 terminations of parental rights, and preadoptive and adoptive placements) involving an 21 “Indian child,” a term which is defined as “an unmarried person who is under age 18 22 and is either (a) a member of an Indian tribe or (b) is eligible for membership in an 23 Indian tribe and is the biological child of a member of an Indian tribe.” 25 U.S.C. § 24 1903(1), (4). In such proceedings, Congress accorded tribes “numerous prerogatives 25 . . . through the ICWA’s substantive provisions . . . as a means of protecting not only the 26 interests of individual Indian children and their families, but also of the tribes 27 themselves.” Holyfield, 490 U.S. at 49. ICWA also provides important procedural and 28 substantive standards to be followed in state-administered proceedings concerning possible removal of an Indian child from her family. See, e.g., 25 U.S.C. § 1912(d) (requiring party seeking foster-care placement to prove that “active efforts” designed to prevent the breakup of the Indian family were provided); id. § 1912(e) (requiring expert testimony as to the potential for damage should child remain in parent’s custody).

The “most important substantive requirement imposed on state courts” by ICWA is the placement preference for any adoption, pre-adoptive placement, or foster-care placement. Holyfield, 490 U.S. at 36; see 25 U.S.C. § 1915(a)-(b). “In any adoptive placement of an Indian child under State law,” ICWA requires that “a preference shall be given, in the absence of good cause to the contrary, to a placement with (1) a member of the child’s extended family; (2) other members of the Indian child’s tribe; or (3) other Indian families.” 25 U.S.C. § 1915(a); see also id. § 1915(b) (preferences for foster-care or preadoptive placements). These preferences reflect “Federal policy that, where possible, an Indian child should remain in the Indian community.” H.R. REP. NO. 95-1386, at 23; see also Pima Cnty. Juv. Action No. S-903, 635 P.2d 187, 189 (Ariz. App. 1981) (“The Act is based on the fundamental assumption that it is in the Indian child’s best interest that its relationship to the tribe be protected.”); Michael J., Jr. v. Michael J., Sr., 7 P.3d 960, 963 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2000) (same).

The Department’s Guidelines. On February 25, 2015, the Department updated guidelines first published in 1979 to “help assure that rights guaranteed by the Act are protected when state courts decide Indian child custody matters,” 44 Fed. Reg. 67,584, 67,584 (1979), noting that “[m]uch has changed in the 35 years since the original guidelines were published, but many of the problems that led to the enactment of ICWA persist.” 80 Fed. Reg. 10146, 10,147 (2015) (“Guidelines”). The Department invited comments from federally recognized Indian tribes, state-court representatives, and organizations concerned with tribal children, child welfare, and adoption. Id.

As the Department explained, “[t]hese updated guidelines provide guidance to State courts and child welfare agencies implementing [ICWA].” Id. at 10,146. The Guidelines “promote compliance with ICWA’s stated goals and provisions by providing 1 a framework for State courts and child welfare agencies to follow.” Id. at 10,146-47.

 2 By offering the Department’s interpretation of ICWA along with “best practices for 3 ICWA compliance,” the Guidelines address issues and problems that have arisen since 4 the guidelines’ original publication, and that have prevented the proper and nationally 5 consistent implementation of this federal statute in keeping with Congress’s purposes in 6 enacting ICWA. Id. at 10,147-50.

7 The 2015 Formal Rulemaking. Recognizing that the non-binding nature of the 8 Guidelines makes them less effective than regulations in addressing problems with the 9 interpretation and implementation of ICWA, on March 20, 2015, the Department began 10 a notice-and-comment process to promulgate regulations to implement ICWA.
 11 Regulations for State Courts and Agencies in Indian Child Custody Proceedings, 80
 12 Fed. Reg. 14,880 (Mar. 20, 2015). Accordingly, the Department’s proposed rule 13 “would incorporate many of the changes made to the recently revised guidelines into 14 regulations” in order to establish “the Department’s interpretation of ICWA as a binding 15 interpretation to ensure consistency in implementation of ICWA across all States.” Id.; 16 see also id. at 14,882 (“The proposed rule makes several of the provisions issued in the 17 recently published [2015 Guidelines] binding as regulation.”). The Department’s 18 rulemaking process is ongoing and no final regulation has been published.

19 STANDARD OF REVIEW

20 Rule 12(b)(1) motions to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction “may be 21 either on the face of the pleadings or by presenting extrinsic evidence.” Warren v. Fox
 22 Family Worldwide, Inc., 328 F.3d 1136, 1139 (9th Cir. 2003). Where a 12(b)(1) motion 23 is facial in nature, relying on the allegations of a complaint solely, the Court treats “the 24 factual allegations in the complaint as true.” Courthouse News Serv. v. Planet, 750 F.3d 25 776, 780 (9th Cir. 2014). “[T]he party asserting subject matter jurisdiction has the 26 burden of proving its existence.” Pistor v. Garcia, 791 F.3d 1104, 1111 (9th Cir. 2015)
 27 (internal quotations and brackets omitted). For a motion to dismiss for failure to state a 28 claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), a court “must accept all factual allegations of the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party.” Two Rivers v. Lewis, 174 F.3d 987, 991 (9th Cir. 1999). Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal “can be based on the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged.” UMG Recordings, Inc. v. Shelter Capital Partners LLC, 718 F.3d 1006, 1014 (9th Cir. 2013) (citing Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep’t, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990)).

ARGUMENT

I. Plaintiffs Fail to Establish Standing

Plaintiffs must demonstrate that they have standing to appear before this Court before it may exercise jurisdiction over their claims. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). To carry this burden, Plaintiffs must show (1) they have suffered an “injury in fact” to a legally protected interest and that injury is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. Friends of the Earth v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81 (2000); Defenders, 504 U.S. at 560. Review of standing must be “especially rigorous when reaching the merits of a dispute would force [a court] to decide whether an action taken by one or the other two branches of Federal Government was unconstitutional.” Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 819-20 (1997).

Plaintiffs bring five counts against Federal Defendants.¹ Count One alleges that Plaintiffs’ equal protection rights are violated by six particular provisions of ICWA and the Guidelines: (1) the active-efforts requirement; (2) the burden of proof required to remove a child from her parents and place her in foster care; (3) the burden of proof to terminate a parent’s rights; (4) the foster-care placement preferences; (5) the adoptive-placement preferences; and (6) the transfer provision. Compl. at ¶ 94. Count Two alleges that these same provisions (less the active-efforts requirement) violate Plaintiffs’ due process rights. Id. ¶¶ 98, 100. As discussed in Section I.A. below, Plaintiffs have

1 not alleged, however, that they have been injured by each of these particular provisions.
 2 See Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 185 (“[A] plaintiff must demonstrate standing separately for 3 each form of relief sought.”); Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 358 n.6 (1996) (citizen 4 aggrieved in one respect does not have standing to bring broader challenge, as “standing 5 is not dispensed in gross”); see also Virginia v. Am. Booksellers Ass’n, Inc., 484 U.S.
 6 383, 392 (1988) (“the usual rule is that a party may assert only a violation of its own 7 rights”).

8 The only specific provisions that are even arguably alleged to have caused 9 Plaintiffs injury are the adoptive-placement preferences (alleged to have injured C., 10 M.C., and K.C.) and the transfer provision (alleged to have injured A.D., S.H., and 11 J.H.), but these allegations, and those alleging injury from the statute more broadly, fail 12 to satisfy the constitutional minimum for Article III standing. See infra Section I.B.
 13 Because they have identified no cognizable injury caused by the statute, Plaintiffs also 14 do not have standing to bring the claims in Count Four, which asserts that ICWA 15 exceeds Congress’ authority and violates the Tenth Amendment. Nor have Plaintiffs 16 identified any forced association with tribes to support their standing to bring Count
 17 Five, which alleges that ICWA and the Guidelines violate the rights of Indian children 18 to freedom of association. See infra Section I.A. Moreover, Carol Coghlan Carter has 19 failed to demonstrate that she has capacity to act as next friend to C. and A.D., much 20 less a class of Indian children. See infra Section I.C. Finally, even if A.D., S.H., and 21 J.H. met their burden of establishing standing based on the Guidelines’ transfer 22 provision, the Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”) claim in Count Six must be 23 dismissed because the Guidelines are not binding and any injury they allege is neither 24 traceable to the Guidelines nor redressable by their removal. See infra Section I.D.

25 A. Plaintiffs Have Not Alleged That They Have Been Injured By the Named 26 Provisions of ICWA and the Guidelines, Nor That They Have Been 27 Injured by Any Forced Association With a Tribe

28 Counts One and Two. In Counts One and Two, Plaintiffs ask that this Court declare that provisions of ICWA and the Guidelines relating to active efforts, the 1 burdens of proof required to remove Indian children and terminate their parents' rights, 2 and the foster-care placement preferences, inter alia, are unconstitutional. Plaintiffs 3 have the burden to demonstrate that they are directly affected by each provision of 4 ICWA and the Guidelines that they challenge. See Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 185; Ryan v.

 5 Mesa Unified Sch. Dist., 64 F.Supp.3d 1356, 1360 (D. Ariz. 2014) (dismissing First 6 Amendment challenge to program because plaintiffs failed to allege personal exposure
 7 to it, adverse repercussions, or altered conduct as a result). Here, neither C. nor A.D.
 8 (together "Indian Child Plaintiffs"), nor S.H., J.H., M.C., or K.C. (together, "Foster 9 Parent Plaintiffs") have alleged that they are injured by the active-efforts provision, the 10 burdens of proof, or the foster-care placement preferences established by ICWA and 11 echoed in the Guidelines.² See Compl. ¶¶ 57-81, 90-93 (describing these provisions in 12 general terms without alleging that any named Plaintiff suffers injury from them).
 13 Accordingly, this Court should dismiss Counts One and Two as they pertain to active 14 efforts, the burdens of proof, and the foster-care placement preferences in ICWA and 15 the Guidelines.

16 Count Five. Although Carter asserts in Count Five that ICWA violates Indian 17 Child Plaintiffs' First Amendment right to freedom of association, she does not allege 18 injury sufficient to confer standing. The Complaint does not allege that either C. or 19 A.D. has been forced to associate with their Tribes, the Navajo Nation and the Gila 20 River Indian Community ("Gila River"), respectively, or that the participation of the 21 Tribes in their child-custody proceedings has in any way harmed them. See Compl. ¶¶ 22 19, 117 (alleging only that A.D. could be subject to tribal jurisdiction, and that such 23 association is often against the will or contrary to the best interests of Indian children
 24 like A.D. and C.); see also Van Fossen v. United States, No. CV-F-93-137-DLB, 1993

25 ² Such allegations would not support Plaintiffs' standing anyway because any injury 26 from active-efforts, the burdens of proof, or the foster-care placement preferences
 27 occurred in the past and is not likely to recur. See Hodgers-Durgin v. De La Vina, 199 28 F.3d 1037, 1044 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc) (finding that motorists lacked standing to challenge traffic stops when they had been stopped only once in ten years).

1 WL 655008, *1 (E.D. Cal. Dec. 27, 1993) (no standing to challenge membership 2 disclosure because, as a known member of the organization, plaintiff will suffer no
3 associational injury). Without First Amendment injury, Count Five must be dismissed.

4 B. Plaintiffs' Allegations of Harm Fail to Satisfy Constitutional 5 Requirements for Injury-In-Fact or Are Not Traceable to ICWA

6 1. C.'s Alleged Injury From the Adoptive-Placement Preferences
7 Does Not Support Standing

8 In Counts One, Two, Four, Five, and Six, Carter purports to challenge various 9 provisions of the Guidelines and ICWA on behalf of C., but she has failed to establish 10 that C. has standing to support these challenges. According to the Complaint, C. has 11 remained in foster care while “alternative ICWA-compliant placements” are evaluated, 12 and he has been harmed by allegedly being told that his foster parents are not his 13 “mommy” and “daddy” and by being required to visit with potential adoptive 14 placements. Compl. ¶¶ 22-24. Carter’s challenge on behalf of C. in Counts One and 15 Two thus must be limited to allegations that ICWA’s adoptive-placement preferences 16 violate equal protection and due process. See supra Section I.A. And Count Six must 17 be dismissed as to C. because Carter does not allege that C. has been injured by the 18 Guidelines’ transfer provisions. See Compl. ¶¶ 21-29.

19 Even as to the adoptive-placement preferences, however, Carter has not alleged 20 sufficient facts to demonstrate that C. has been injured by this provision. Nor has she 21 alleged any injury caused by ICWA. At most, Carter states that (1) ICWA has caused 22 C. to spend four years in foster care, Compl. ¶ 24, and (2) C. suffered emotional and 23 psychological harm from being reminded by third parties that M.C. and K.C. are not his 24 biological or adoptive parents. Id. ¶ 24. Carter does not allege that the length of time in 25 foster care has caused injury to C., nor could she, as Plaintiffs’ complaint presumes that 26 placement with M.C. and K.C. is in his best interests and asserts he has been with them 27 for the entire duration. See id. ¶ 22 (“C. has continuously remained in foster care with 28 M.C. and K.C.”). The Ninth Circuit has previously declined to hear claims brought by children who remained in their preferred foster-care placements because they were

1 evidently not injured by policies alleged to threaten such placements. See Lipscomb By 2 and Through DeFehr v. Simmons, 962 F.2d 1374, 1376-77 (9th Cir. 1992) (considering 3 only challenges brought by children who had been denied placement with relatives as a 4 result of the policy).³

5 Nor is any emotional or psychological injury that C. may have suffered by virtue 6 of being told that M.C. and K.C. are not his “mommy” and “daddy” caused by the 7 adoptive-placement preferences. As an initial matter, this claimed injury occurred in the 8 past and is not alleged to be ongoing or likely to recur. See Hodgers-Durgin, 199 F.3d 9 at 1044; Caldwell v. LeFaver, 928 F.2d 331, 335 (9th Cir. 1991) (no standing for 10 equitable relief when children’s removal occurred in the past and father demonstrated 11 no likelihood that it would be repeated). Although Carter posits that this injury arose 12 from a visit with an ICWA-compliant placement, see Compl. ¶ 23, there is no
13 connection between the statute and C.’s injury, and Carter does not pretend otherwise.
14 The adoptive-placement preferences require no more than that extended family and 15 tribal placements be considered; they do not direct any particular behavior by such 16 persons or even require visitation prior to placement. See 25 U.S.C. § 1915(a).
17 Therefore, even if the allegations in the Complaint are true, C. has not been injured by 18 ICWA, but by a third party not before the Court. See San Diego Cnty. Gun Rights 19 Comm. v. Reno, 98 F.3d 1121, 1130 (9th Cir. 1996) (concluding that plaintiff lacked 20 standing to challenge legislation because increased cost of weapons was attributable to 21 the independent decision of dealers, not to legislation restricting supply). Finally, the 22 relief Plaintiffs seek would not end C.’s ongoing injury (if any) or prevent it from 23 recurring (if such were likely to happen): C. is in foster care as a result of decisions 24 made by his biological parents, Compl. ¶ 21, and will remain in foster care until the 25 state court decides on a permanency plan and, if the plan is for adoption, a suitable

26 ³ Carter does not allege that Foster Parent Plaintiffs will be prevented from adopting 27 Indian Child Plaintiffs, nor could she because ICWA does not dictate an outcome, only 28 a process.

1 adoptive home. See, e.g., Ariz. Dep’t of Child Safety: Policy & Procedure Manual at 2 Ch. 6, § 6 available at <https://extranet.azdes.gov/dcyfpolicy/>. Because Carter has not 3 alleged injury from or traceable to ICWA or the adoptive-placement preferences, C.
 4 does not have standing to challenge the statute or the transfer provision, and Counts 5 One, Two, Four, Five, and Six must be dismissed.

6 2. Carter Failed to Allege that A.D. is Injured by ICWA or the 7 Guideline’s Transfer Provision

8 In Counts One, Two, Four, Five, and Six, Carter purports to challenge various 9 provisions of the Guidelines and ICWA on behalf of A.D., but she has failed to establish 10 that A.D. has standing to support these challenges. Carter does not even claim that A.D.
 11 has been injured by any of the provisions other than those involving transfer, see 12 Compl. ¶¶ 17-20, so her challenge on behalf of A.D. in Counts One and Two is limited 13 to allegations that the transfer provisions violate equal protection and due process.

14 These claims must also be dismissed, along with the rest of the constitutional and 15 APA claims that Carter brings on behalf of A.D., because Carter has failed to allege 16 injury to A.D. by ICWA or the transfer provisions sufficient to satisfy Article III
 17 standing. At most, Carter alleges that (1) but for ICWA, A.D. would already be cleared 18 for adoption, Compl. ¶ 20, and (2) were A.D.’s case to be transferred to tribal court, it 19 would force her to submit to tribal jurisdiction despite not having “any contact” with the 20 Tribe. Id. ¶ 19. As described above with respect to C., Carter does not and could not 21 claim that A.D. has been injured by remaining in foster care with S.H. and J.H., who are 22 “the only family that [she] has ever known.” Id. ¶ 19; see Lipscomb, 962 F.2d at 1376-23 77; see supra note 3.

24 Nor is A.D. injured by the hypothetical possibility that her case could be 25 transferred to another jurisdiction. See Mont. Envtl. Info. Ctr. v. Stone-Manning, 766
 26 F.3d 1184, 1189 (9th Cir. 2014) (anticipated injury from government’s failure to survey 27 hydrological conditions in reviewing a mining-permit application was not imminent 28 where review was still pending); Lipscomb, 962 F.2d at 1376-77 (declining to consider possibility that relative placements would abandon foster children in the absence of foster-care payments). In order for A.D.'s case to be transferred, Gila River must do more than merely consider that alternative: it must formally petition the state court with a request to transfer. See 25 U.S.C. § 1911(b). The state court must then find that good cause does not exist to maintain the present forum. Id. Finally, the tribal court must agree to accept jurisdiction. Id. None of these steps can be assumed and Carter does not allege that they have come to pass. See Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l U.S.A., 133 S. Ct. 1138, 1150 (2013) ("It is just not possible for a litigant to prove in advance that the judicial system will lead to any particular result in his case."). Even if the case were transferred, however, it would not require that A.D. submit to a forum with which she has no contact. If A.D. is an Indian child, then by definition she is either a member of Gila River or the daughter of a member and eligible for membership.⁴ See 25 U.S.C. § 1903(4). Thus, her contacts with Gila River are comparable to those she enjoys with the State of Arizona: citizenship by operation of choices made by her biological parents. Because A.D. is not injured by ICWA or the transfer provisions, she does not have standing to challenge them in Counts One, Two, Four, Five, and Six.

3. Foster Parents Have Not Alleged Injury In Fact or That Any Injury Is Caused By ICWA or the Guidelines

Foster Parents have failed to allege cognizable injury or causation sufficient to maintain standing to challenge ICWA or the Guidelines. As an initial matter, Foster Parents can only maintain claims that are supported by direct injury to their legally protected interests. They do not have third-party standing to raise claims on behalf of Indian Child Plaintiffs, who are separately represented in this case by Carter. See Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 113-14 (1976) (requiring as a prerequisite for third-party standing a genuine obstacle to assertion of the right by the third party).

At most, Foster Parents assert that (1) but for ICWA, Indian Child Plaintiffs would have been cleared for adoption by Foster Parent Plaintiffs, Compl. ¶¶ 20, 24; (2) were A.D.'s case to be transferred to tribal court, S.H. and J.H. would be "force[d]" to submit to tribal jurisdiction despite not having "any contact" with the Tribe, id. ¶ 19; and (3) that M.C. and K.C. allegedly drive C. each week, sometimes long distances, to visit with proposed placements, id. ¶ 23. But Foster Parents do not allege that they are harmed by their unrealized desire to adopt Indian Child Plaintiffs, nor would such an allegation support injury in fact. Foster Parent Plaintiffs do not have a legally protected interest in the adoption of their foster children. See Gibson v. Merced Cnty. Dep't of Human Res., 799 F.2d 582 (9th Cir. 1986) (noting, without deciding, that where foster care is intended to be temporary and the goals are expressly other than to permit the foster parents' adoption, it weighs against identifying a protected liberty interest). Even if they did, Foster Parent Plaintiffs have not alleged that ICWA or the Guidelines prevent them from fulfilling their desire to adopt Indian Child Plaintiffs, and it would be entirely speculative to do so. See supra note 3.

The injuries that S.H. and J.H. do allege from the transfer provisions are speculative and likewise do not describe injury in fact. For the same reasons described above with respect to A.D., the hypothetical possibility that A.D.'s case could be transferred to another jurisdiction does not rise to the level of injury in fact. Even if the case were transferred, however, it would not require that S.H. and J.H. submit to a forum with which they have no contact. First, S.H. and J.H. have not alleged that they are parties to the child-welfare proceeding involving A.D, and that they are thus required to "submit" to the jurisdiction of a tribal forum. See Roberto F. v. Ariz. Dep't of Econ. Sec., 301 P.3d 211, 216 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2013) (absent intervention, foster parents are "participants," not "parties," in the dependency proceeding). Further, S.H. and J.H. know that A.D. is subject to ICWA and, if they are licensed foster-care providers, have previously been trained in ICWA's application. See Ariz. Admin. Code, R6-5-5825(A)(15) (requiring ICWA training as a licensing condition). They

1 have since decided of their own accord to pursue adoption, thereby voluntarily 2 affiliating themselves with not just A.D. but with her Tribe, Gila River. Because their 3 engagement with the tribal forum is voluntary and because they fail to identify any 4 specific harm that would arise from participation therein, they cannot be said to be 5 injured by a transfer to tribal court, if one were to occur.

6 Finally, the injuries M.C. and K.C. allege are not traceable to ICWA and the 7 Guidelines. Neither ICWA nor the Guidelines require that foster parents expend 8 resources to have Indian children visit with prospective placements; rather, these are 9 requirements of Arizona state law that M.C. and K.C. have voluntarily agreed to. As 10 M.C. and K.C. acknowledge, visits with proposed placements are “pursuant to a court-11 supervised and DCS-supported case plan,” Compl. ¶ 23, and are therefore a condition of 12 their continued custody of C. By agreeing to provide C. with foster care, M.C. and K.C.
 13 have agreed to assist him by performing tasks, helping him attain goals, and helping him 14 obtain services specified in the case plan. See Ariz. Admin. Code, R6-5-5828(C). They 15 have also agreed to provide or arrange transportation to meet his needs as provided in 16 the case plan. Id. R6-5-5832(A).⁵ Because their engagement with C. is voluntary and 17 their efforts to help him find a placement are a requirement of their agreement with the 18 State, not of ICWA or the Guidelines, M.C. and K.C. have not identified a redressable 19 injury linked to ICWA or the Federal Defendants.

20 C. Carter Does Not Have Next-Friend Standing

21 Carter has failed to meet her burden to establish herself as a proper next friend to 22 Indian Child Plaintiffs, or to the putative class of children with Indian ancestry, and 23 without appropriate representation, A.D. and C. lack standing to pursue this action. See 24 Safouane v. Fleck, 226 F. App’x 753, 758 (9th Cir. 2007); Compl. ¶ 11. Next-friend 25 standing is not automatically conferred, and the burden is on the putative next friend to 26 ⁵ Moreover, M.C. and K.C., like all Arizona foster parents, are presumably compensated 27 for their assistance to C. See, e.g., Arizona Admin. For Children, Youth and Families, 28 Family Foster Home Care Rates and Fees Schedule (eff. Mar. 1, 2009) available at https://www.azdes.gov/InternetFiles/InternetProgrammaticForms/pdf/foster_rates.pdf.

1 clearly establish the propriety of her status. Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 163 2 (1990).

3 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(c) allows a next friend to bring suit on behalf 4 of a minor “who does not have a duly appointed representative.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(c); 5 see T.W. by Enk v. Brophy, 124 F.3d 893, 895 (7th Cir. 1997). Such capacity is not 6 lightly granted. Whitmore, 495 U.S. at 163 (1990); Sam M. ex rel Elliot v. Carcieri, 608 7 F.3d 77, 90 (1st Cir. 2010). The Ninth Circuit requires an alleged “next friend” to 8 demonstrate “(1) that the petitioner is unable to litigate his own cause due to mental 9 incapacity, lack of access to the court, or other similar disability; and (2) the next friend 10 has some significant relationship with, and is truly dedicated to the best interests of the 11 [real party in interest].” Massie ex rel. Kroll v. Woodford, 244 F.3d 1192, 1194 (9th 12 Cir. 2001); Coalition of Clergy, Lawyers, and Professors v. Bush, 310 F.3d 1153, 1162 13 (9th Cir. 2002) (stating a significant relationship is a strong objective measure of 14 dedication to a ward’s best interests). Here, Carter has made no showing that Indian 15 Child Plaintiffs lacked general representation or other court-appointed representation, 16 such as the guardian ad litem they were presumably appointed in their child-custody 17 proceedings. She also fails to allege any relationship, let alone a significant 18 relationship, with Indian Child Plaintiffs. Rather than showing any interest in or 19 knowledge of A.D. and C. or their child-custody cases, Carter asserts instead her 20 credentials as a licensed attorney who has represented “children with Indian ancestry” 21 and other various parties in Arizona state child-custody proceedings. Compl. ¶ 11.
 22 However, courts will not allow persons having only an ideological stake in a child’s 23 case to serve as next friend. Sam M., 608 F.3d at 92; see also Ad Hoc Comm. of 24 Concerned Teachers v. Greenburgh No. 11 Union Free Sch. Dist., 873 F.2d 25, 31 (2nd 25 Cir. 1989) (“We would not sanction any attempt to assert the legitimate rights of 26 children as a mere pretext for advancing ulterior political or economic aims.”); T.W. by 27 Enk, 124 F.3d at 897. Carter has asserted no interest in or involvement with Indian 28 Child Plaintiffs or their ongoing child-custody proceedings, and as such, lacks standing

1 as next friend to the children.

2 D. No Plaintiff Has Standing to Challenge the Guidelines

3 Even if the Court otherwise finds that at least one Plaintiff has standing to 4 maintain one of the counts in the Complaint, it must nonetheless dismiss that challenge
 5 to the extent that it purports to apply to the Guidelines. As non-binding 6 recommendations that state courts have full discretion to reject, consider, or apply if 7 they find them persuasive, the Guidelines cannot as a matter of law cause Plaintiffs 8 injury, nor would setting them aside provide Plaintiffs with relief. As is discussed infra
 9 Section V, the Guidelines are a guidance document that causes no injury because it does 10 not impose legal obligations or consequences on Plaintiffs or any other party except at 11 the discretion of state courts. See Simon v. E. Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 42-12 43 (1976) (encouraging a third party to act in a particular way is not causation if not 13 actually directing the party or mandating a specific result). Lastly, setting the 14 Guidelines aside would not relieve Plaintiffs from the operation of the placement
 15 preferences, the transfer provisions, and the other provisions of ICWA they complain 16 of, nor would it prevent state courts from applying the interpretations advanced by the 17 Guidelines if they find them persuasive.

18 II. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Not Ripe Because Their Adjudication Will Require 19 Factual Assumptions About Whether and How State Courts Will Apply
 20 ICWA and the Guidelines and Because Plaintiffs Will Suffer No Hardship
 21 from Delay

22 Just as Plaintiffs' failure to establish a likelihood of future injury undermines 23 their standing, it also renders their claim for declaratory relief unripe. Ripeness doctrine 24 protects courts from premature adjudication likely to "entangl[e] them[] in abstract 25 disagreements." Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148 (1967). Because Plaintiffs 26 have not been injured by ICWA or the Guidelines, they also fail the Article III test for 27 ripeness, which coincides squarely with standing's injury-in-fact analysis. See Thomas 28 v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 220 F.3d 1134, 1138 (9th Cir. 2000). That

1 analysis is included in Section I and is incorporated here by reference.⁶ But Plaintiffs 2 also do not satisfy the prudential ripeness inquiry, whereby a Court must assess both the 3 claim's fitness for adjudication and any hardship to its proponent that may be caused by 4 withholding review. Abbott Labs., 387 U.S. at 149. Where, as here, an injury "rests 5 upon contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated, or indeed may not 6 occur at all," it is not ripe as the subject of decision in a federal court. Texas v. United 7 States, 523 U.S. 296, 300 (1998) (internal quotation omitted). It is Plaintiffs' burden to 8 prove otherwise. See Renne v. Geary, 501 U.S. 312, 316 (1991); Colwell v. Dep't of 9 Health and Human Servs., 558 F.3d 1112, 1121 (9th Cir. 2009).

10 Plaintiffs here rely on potential future harms that are not certainly impending.
 11 Where state-court proceedings are ongoing, the Ninth Circuit has previously held that 12 federal injunctive and declaratory relief regarding the same cause of action was 13 premature. In Fern v. Turman, 736 F.2d 1367, 1369 (9th Cir. 1984), the Ninth Circuit 14 deemed "unfit for judicial resolution" claims challenging the constitutionality of a 15 federal statute that authorized state courts hearing divorce cases to divide the retirement
 16 pay of military officers with their former spouses. The complaint also sought injunctive 17 relief from federal enforcement. Because claims were "contingent both upon a decision 18 of the state court not yet final and an administrative action not yet taken," the court

19 ⁶ The alignment of constitutional injury-in-fact and ripeness occurs when the injury 20 alleged is grounded in potential future harms. Thus, the fact that injury to C. is not 21 certainly impending not only means that he lacks standing, but also that his case is not 22 ripe: In order for Carter to argue otherwise, a prospective placement for C. would need 23 to once again convey to him that M.C. and K.C. are not his biological parents. There is 24 no indication that C. will have further visits with prospective placements, much less that 25 they would behave in this way. Similarly, for Carter's claims on behalf of A.D. and 26 S.H.'s and J.H.'s claims regarding transfer to be ripe at the time the Complaint was 27 filed, the state court would have had to have received a petition to transfer from Gila 28 River, and have determined that good cause did not exist to deny transfer. In addition, the tribal court would have had to have accepted jurisdiction. Finally, ICWA and the Guidelines have neither altered Plaintiffs' existing foster-care placements nor had any effect on their prospects for adoption.

1 found that any decision on the matter would address a “purely hypothetical situation.”
 2 Plaintiffs in the present suit likewise seek to challenge the constitutionality of multiple 3 provisions of a federal statute that may or may not be applied to ongoing state 4 proceedings and to enjoin Federal Defendants who have not expressed any intent to 5 enforce the statute, and their claims should be dismissed as unripe.

6 III. This Court Should Abstain From Review of Plaintiffs’ Claims

7 Consideration of Plaintiffs’ Complaint is precluded by the Pullman and Younger 8 abstention doctrines. These doctrines reflect the judgment of the courts and Congress as 9 to the appropriate balance between principles of federalism and judicial economy when 10 overlapping questions of federal and state law are adjudicated simultaneously in both 11 courts. In particular, Pullman requires abstention from hearing Counts One, Two, Four 12 and Five, and, in the alternative, Younger requires dismissing any claim for declaratory
 13 relief that ICWA or the Guidelines violate the Constitution both facially and as applied 14 to Plaintiffs and others similarly situated.⁷ See Compl. at 28.

15 In the Ninth Circuit, the prerequisites for abstention under the Pullman doctrine 16 require that (1) the complaint touches upon a sensitive area of social policy, (2) 17 constitutional adjudication can be avoided if there were a definite ruling on the state
 18 issue, and (3) the determinative issue of state law is unclear. See L.H. v. Jamieson, 643
 19 F.2d 1351, 1354-56 (9th Cir. 1981) (finding that class action regarding care of juveniles 20 in state custody satisfied prerequisites for abstention under R. R. Comm’n v. Pullman 21 Co., 312 U.S. 496 (1941)). Here, it is unclear that, inter alia, state-court precedent
 22 would require transfer of A.D.’s proceedings to tribal court, grant C. a new adoptive 23 placement, or treat the Guidelines as anything other than guidance. See In re Maricopa 24 Cnty. Juvenile Action No. Js-8287, 828 P.2d 1245 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1991) (affirming 25 denial of transfer in part because child had bonded with foster parents); Navajo Nation

26 ⁷ A declaration is intended to have the same practical effect as an injunction prohibiting 27 state courts from applying the statute and the Guidelines in child-custody hearings. See 28 Samuels v. Mackell, 401 U.S. 66, 72 (1971).

1 v. Ariz. Dep't of Econ. Sec., 284 P.3d 29, 36-38 (Ariz. Ct. App. Aug. 30, 2011)
 2 (upholding deviation from placement preferences in part because child had bonded with 3 foster parents). Because the resolution of these issues would moot or provide concrete 4 factual context for Plaintiffs' constitutional claims, the correct approach is for this Court 5 to abstain to allow Arizona courts to answer these questions.

6 Plaintiffs' request for declaratory judgment should also be dismissed under the 7 Younger doctrine. In Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 46 (1971), the Supreme Court 8 counseled against federal-court interference with a pending state-court proceeding in the 9 absence of great and immediate irreparable injury to the federal plaintiff. Id. at 54. The 10 Ninth Circuit has since determined that Younger abstention requires (1) the existence of 11 a pending state proceeding, (2) that is a quasi-criminal enforcement action or involves a 12 state's interest in enforcing orders and judgments of its courts, (3) that implicates an 13 important state interest, (4) that plaintiff has adequate opportunity to raise federal 14 constitutional claims in the state forum, and (5) that the federal action would have the 15 practical effect of enjoining the state proceedings. See ReadyLink Healthcare, Inc. v.
 16 State Compensation Ins. Fund, 754 F.3d 754, 758 (9th Cir. 2014).

17 All of these requirements are met here. The Complaint assumes the existence of 18 ongoing state-court, child-welfare proceedings, which implicate an important state 19 interest and have long been treated as appropriate for Younger abstention. See, e.g., 20 Morrow v. Winslow, 94 F.3d 1386 (10th Cir. 1996) (dismissing, pursuant to Younger, a 21 federal due process challenge to ICWA in favor of ongoing, state-court adoption 22 proceedings).⁸ Plaintiffs have failed to identify any procedural barrier that would 23 prevent Arizona courts from evaluating claims that ICWA and the Guidelines violate

24 ⁸ Plaintiffs do not seek the type of relief – increased funding or systemic changes in the 25 quality of child-welfare services provided by state agencies – that the Ninth Circuit 26 found unworthy of Younger abstention in Jamieson, 643 F.2d at 1354; instead, they 27 demand that this Court enjoin state courts and agencies from applying long-standing 28 state and federal laws to their ongoing child-custody proceedings, which clearly warrants equitable restraint under Younger.

1 their constitutional rights (indeed, state courts routinely consider such claims). See 2 Moore v. Sims, 442 U.S. 415, 432 (1979) (abstaining because, inter alia, appellees did 3 not show that state procedural law would bar their claims). Yet Plaintiffs have elected 4 to seek a declaratory judgment in federal court that, if granted, would necessarily 5 change the outcome of the state-court proceedings. As a result, Plaintiffs' claim for 6 declaratory relief should be dismissed in favor of pending state-court proceedings.

7 IV. The Complaint Should Be Dismissed For Failure to State Any Claim for 8 Relief

9 A. Plaintiffs' Equal Protection Claims Fail Because ICWA and the 10 Guidelines Apply Based on the Parent or the Child's Affiliation with a Political Entity, Not on Their Race

11 Count One alleges that particular provisions of ICWA and the Guidelines violate 12 the Equal Protection Guarantee of the Fifth Amendment because they provide 13 procedures and standards that apply based on a child's race or ancestry. This is 14 incorrect as a matter of law. ICWA's application does not turn on a child's race or 15 ancestry. ICWA applies only to child-custody proceedings involving an "Indian child," 16 defined as a child who is a member of an Indian tribe, or who is eligible for membership 17 and has a biological parent who is a member of an Indian tribe. 25 U.S.C. § 1903(4).
 18 Thus, the law expressly limits its application based on political affiliation with a tribe; it 19 makes no mention of race or ancestry.

20 The Supreme Court has flatly rejected the argument that federal laws providing 21 for "special treatment" of Indians, and enacted in furtherance of "Congress' unique 22 obligation toward the Indians," are based on a racial classification. In Morton v.
 23 Mancari, 417 U.S. 535 (1974), a unanimous Supreme Court held that a government-24 employment preference for qualified Indians did not run afoul of the Fifth Amendment 25 because it was "granted to Indians not as a discrete racial group, but, rather, as members 26 of quasi-sovereign tribal entities" Id. at 554, 554 n.24 ("The preference is political 27 rather than racial in nature."). This distinction is based on tribes' unique legal status 28 under federal law as domestic, dependent nations, and upon Congress' plenary power to 1 “single[] Indians out as a proper subject for separate legislation” under, inter alia, the 2 Indian Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution. Id. at 551-52; U.S. CONST. Art. II,

 3 s.2, cl.2; Worcester v. Georgia, 31 U.S. 515, 519 (1832) (Indian nations are “distinct,
 4 independent communities, retaining their original natural rights,” and the United States 5 may regulate relations with the tribes).

6 The Supreme Court elaborated on these principles in United States v. Antelope, 7 430 U.S. 641, 646 (1977). In Antelope, the Court rejected an equal protection challenge 8 by two tribal members to the application of federal criminal law, rather than state law, 9 to crimes committed by Indians in Indian country. The Court explained:

10 The decisions of this Court leave no doubt that federal 11 legislation with respect to Indian tribes, although relating to 12 Indians as such, is not based on impermissible racial 13 classifications. Quite the contrary, classifications expressly 14 singling out Indian tribes as the subjects of legislation are 15 expressly provided for in the Constitution and supported by 16 the ensuing history of the Federal government’s relations 17 with Indians.

18 Id. at 645. Moreover, Antelope establishes that Mancari is not a narrow holding; rather, 19 it stands more broadly for “the conclusion that federal regulation of Indian affairs is not 20 based on impermissible racial classifications” but rather “is rooted in the unique status 21 of Indians as ‘a separate people’ with their own political institutions.” Id. at 646.

22 Indeed, the principle that Congress may “single[] out Indians for particular and special 23 treatment” in order to fulfill the United States’ unique obligation toward the Indians 24 underlies much of federal Indian law and policy. See Mancari, 417 U.S. at 552 (noting 25 that, if laws targeting tribal Indians “were deemed invidious racial discrimination, an 26 entire Title of the United States Code (25 U.S.C.) would be effectively erased and the 27 solemn commitment of the Government toward the Indians would be jeopardized”).⁹

28 ⁹ Since Mancari, both the Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit have consistently rejected challenges to statutes that provide different treatment of Indians as a political class. See Fisher v. Dist. Ct. of Sixteenth Jud. Dist. of Mont., 424 U.S. 382, 390-91 (1976) (exclusive tribal court jurisdiction over adoption proceedings involving Indians

1 ICWA's provisions fall squarely within Mancari and its progeny. The 2 application of ICWA depends on political affiliation with a federally recognized Indian 3 tribe, not race.¹⁰ 25 U.S.C. § 1903(4). ICWA thus does not apply to proceedings
 4 involving children who may have Indian ancestry but are neither members of a tribe, 5 nor eligible for membership and the child of a tribal member.¹¹ A.D. and C. are alleged 6 to be members of, or eligible for membership in, federally recognized Indian tribes, and 7 if either of them qualifies as an "Indian child" under ICWA, the application of ICWA to 8 their child-welfare proceedings has nothing to do with their race. As numerous state 9 courts have concluded, ICWA does not violate the equal protection guarantee of the 10 U.S. Constitution. See, e.g., In re K.M.O., 280 P.3d 1203, 1215 (Wyo. 2012) (ICWA's 11 is not racial discrimination); Moe v. Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of 12 Flathead Reservation, 425 U.S. 463, 479-80 (1976) (tax immunity for reservation 13 Indians is not racial discrimination); E.E.O.C. v. Peabody Western Coal Co., 773 F.3d 14 977, 988 (9th Cir. 2014) (upholding hiring preference based on tribal affiliation as a 15 political classification designed to further the federal government's trust obligations to 16 the tribe); Means v. Navajo Nation, 432 F.3d 924, 931 (9th Cir. 2005) (rejecting equal 17 protection challenge to statute providing tribal criminal jurisdiction over nonmember

 18 Indians); United States v. Zepeda, 792 F.3d 1103, 1113 (9th Cir. 2015) (Mancari applies 19 even if statute might impose "disproportionate burdens imposed on Indians").

18 ¹⁰ Although the definition of "Indian child" encompasses some children who are not 19 themselves yet enrolled in a tribe, Congress reasonably determined that the political 20 affiliation of the child could be measured through a parent's membership combined with 21 the child's eligibility. Congress considered its authority to legislate with regard to 22 Indians who are not enrolled members of a tribe and concluded that "[t]he constitutional 23 and plenary power of Congress over Indians and Indian tribes and affairs cannot be 24 made to hinge upon the cranking into operation of a mechanical process established 25 under tribal law, particularly with respect to Indian children who, because of their 26 minority, cannot make a reasoned decision about their tribal and Indian identity." H.R.
 27 REP. NO. 95-1386, at 16-17.

25 ¹¹ See, e.g., In re L.S., 812 N.W. 2d 505, 508-09 (S.D. 2012) (ICWA is not based on a 26 racial classification, and does not apply to a child who is not a member and whose 27 parent has not enrolled in tribe); In re Arianna R.G., 657 N.W.2d 363, 368 (Wis. 2003)
 28 (ICWA requires more than merely having Native American ancestors).

1 standard of proof in case involving off-reservation Indian children did not violate equal 2 protection); In re Beach, 246 P.3d 845, 849 (Wash. Ct. App. 2011) (ICWA does not 3 deny off-reservation Indian child equal protection or substantive due process); In re
 4 N.B., 199 P.3d 16, 23 (Colo. Ct. App. 2007) (ICWA is constitutional); In re A.B., 663
 5 N.W.2d 625, 636 (N.D. 2003) (transfer provision did not violate equal protection).

6 Plaintiffs suggest that the political classification of membership is, in fact, 7 impermissible racial classification by alleging that “[m]ost Indian tribes have only blood 8 quantum or lineage requirements as prerequisites for membership.” Compl. ¶ 40. As 9 the Mancari Court recognized, the political relationship of the United States with Indian 10 tribes is inextricably bound up in the status of those tribes as sovereigns predating the 11 formation of the United States, and tribal members are therefore typically descendants 12 of the indigenous peoples of this country. 417 U.S. at 552-53; see also 25 C.F.R. § 13 83.11 (federal acknowledgment as an Indian tribe requires “membership consist[ing] of 14 individuals who descend from a historical Indian tribe”). Accordingly, blood descent is 15 typically shorthand for the social, cultural, and communal ties a person has with a 16 sovereign tribal entity. Per Mancari, this fact does not transform statutes that single out 17 Indians for special treatment into racial discrimination.¹²

18
 19 ¹² Plaintiffs’ view is also a gross oversimplification, as a blood quantum or lineage 20 requirement does not equate in all cases to a “racial” requirement. Compl. ¶ 40.
 21 Membership in some tribes, for example, requires proving descendancy, not as an 22 inquiry into an individual’s genetics or race, but rather as a requirement that members
 23 are related to the political entity. See, e.g. SEMINOLE NATION OF OKLAHOMA CONST., 24 Art. II (requiring that members be descended from 1906 membership, as described on 25 rolls from that era), available at <http://www.sno-nsn.gov/government/constitution>.
 26 Other tribes do not necessarily share a common tribal or ethnic ancestry, but were 27 consolidated into a single political entity by the federal government. See Sarah Krakoff, 28 Inextricably Political: Race, Membership, and Tribal Sovereignty, 87 WASH. L. REV.
 1041, 1090-1104 (2012) (describing consolidation of Mohave, Chemeheuvi, Navajo, and Hopi individuals into the Colorado River Indian Tribes). And in some cases, Congress has imposed membership restrictions on tribes in conjunction with the restoration of tribal status. See, e.g., 25 U.S.C. § 941e (providing for compilation of base roll for Catawba Indian Tribe of South Carolina and limiting future membership in

1 ICWA's provisions are also tied closely to the United States' "unique obligation"
 2 to federally-recognized Indian tribes. Mancari, 417 U.S. at 555. Congress held 3 extensive hearings, comprising hundreds of pages of testimony, that revealed that large 4 numbers of Indian children were being removed from their families and tribes and 5 placed in non-Indian homes and that this practice seriously harmed those children, 6 families, and tribes. See Holyfield, 490 U.S. at 32-35; S. REP. NO. 95-597, at 11-13
 7 (1977). Congress observed that most of these removals were not based on physical 8 abuse, but rather on "ignorance of Indian cultural values and cultural norms" and the 9 discovery of "neglect or abandonment where none exists." H.R. REP. NO. 95-1386, at 10 9-10. Congress also concluded that Federal policies towards Indian tribes – in 11 particular, the "Federal boarding school and dormitory programs" – "also contribute[d] 12 to the destruction of Indian family and community life." Id. at 9; see also id. at 12 13 (acknowledging that the breakdown of Indian families was caused by factors "aris[ing], 14 in large measure, from our national attitudes as reflected in long-established Federal 15 policy and from arbitrary acts of Government.")

16 Congress relied explicitly on "the special relationship between the United States 17 and the Indian tribes and their members and the Federal responsibility to Indian people" 18 in enacting ICWA. 25 U.S.C. § 1901. In particular, Congress found that "there is no 19 resource that is more vital to the continued existence and integrity of Indian tribes than 20 their children and that the United States has a direct interest, as trustee, in protecting 21 Indian children who are members of or are eligible for membership in an Indian tribe."
 22 Id. at § 1901(3); see also H.R. REP. NO. 95-1386, at 13-15 (discussing Congress' 23 plenary power over Indian affairs, finding that "a tribe's children are vital to its integrity 24 and future").

25 Tribe to "lineal descendant[s] of a person on the base membership roll [who] has 26 continued to maintain political relations with the Tribe.") Given credence, Plaintiffs' 27 arguments might also require courts to strike down other legal principles based on 28 descendancy, such as inheritance presumptions and child welfare's preference for placement with extended family.

1 ICWA's provisions are narrowly tailored to this interest. For example, ICWA's 2 requirement that "active efforts" were made to provide remedial services and 3 rehabilitation programs to prevent the breakup of the Indian family is designed to ensure 4 that Indian children are not unnecessarily removed from their parents, and responds to 5 the extensive evidence presented to Congress that Indian children were routinely 6 removed from their parents for vague reasons and in circumstances that did not threaten 7 their well-being. 25 U.S.C. 1912(d). Plaintiffs presume this heightened standard harms
8 all Indian children. But typically, efforts to keep a family together are not detrimental 9 on their face. See Santosky v. Kramer, 455 U.S. 745, 765 (1982) ("[T]he parents and 10 the child share in interest in avoiding erroneous termination.").

11 Plaintiffs also challenge the "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard of proof in 12 termination of parental rights proceedings under ICWA because this differs from the 13 standard in Arizona for non-ICWA cases. But a uniform federal standard of proof 14 cannot be objectionable, since the Supreme Court established "clear and convincing 15 evidence" as a minimum standard in all child-welfare proceedings, rejecting a lower 16 state standard. Id. at 769. Nor is a higher standard of proof, as used in ICWA, 17 impermissible. Prior to enacting ICWA, Congress heard volumes of testimony that led 18 it to adopt the "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard for state proceedings. See H.R.
19 REP. NO. 95-1386, at 22 (noting that removal of a child from a parent is a penalty as 20 great, if not greater, than a criminal penalty). While the Santosky Court did not adopt 21 this standard as the constitutional minimum for all termination proceedings, its opinion
22 endorses both the ICWA standard as well as higher standards set by state legislatures 23 and courts. Santosky, 455 U.S. at 769-70.

24 Additionally, Plaintiffs challenge the adoptive-placement preference, which 25 requires, absent "good cause to the contrary," a preference for placement with a member 26 of the child's extended family, other members of the child's tribe, or other Indian 27 families. 25 U.S.C. § 1915(a). This preference helps ensure that Indian children are not 28 unnecessarily removed from their families and tribes, and "seeks to protect the rights of

1 the Indian child as an Indian and the rights of the Indian community and the tribe in 2 retaining its children in its society.” H.R. REP. NO. 95-1386, at 23. However, the 3 determination of “good cause” to deviate from these preferences is in the discretion of 4 the state court, and the Guidelines have consistently stated that both “the request of the 5 parents” and “the extraordinary physical and emotional needs of the child” constitute 6 “good cause.” See 80 Fed. Reg. at 10158 (§ F.4(c)). Thus, ICWA imposes modest 7 requirements on child-welfare proceedings to facilitate Congress’s purpose of 8 preventing the unwarranted removal of Indian children from their families and tribes 9 and their placement in non-Indian homes. As a matter of law, Congress’ special 10 treatment of Indian children in ICWA “can be tied rationally to the fulfillment of 11 Congress’ unique obligations toward the Indians,” and its “legislative judgment[] will 12 not be disturbed.” See Mancari, 417 U.S. at 555.

13 B. Plaintiffs Have Failed to Identify a Cognizable Constitutional Liberty 14 Interest In Support of Their Due Process Claims

15 Count Two, alleging due process violations, fails because no recognized liberty 16 interest has been violated. Plaintiffs make three due process allegations. First, 17 Plaintiffs allege that the “jurisdiction-transfer provision forces Plaintiffs to submit to the 18 personal jurisdiction of a forum with which they have no contacts or ties.” Compl. ¶¶ 19 97-98. The Court should not address this argument, as Plaintiffs do not have standing to 20 challenge the transfer provisions, and have not alleged that they have been “forced to 21 submit” to a tribal forum. See id. ¶ 19. Without a specific case or controversy, this 22 Court cannot evaluate whether the transfer provision infringes on Plaintiffs’ due process
 23 rights. See supra at I.B.2.; McCullen v. Coakley, 134 S. Ct. 2518, 2534 n.4 (2014)
 24 (holding that, to prevail in an as-applied challenge, a plaintiff must show that the law 25 has been, or is sufficiently likely to be, unconstitutionally applied to him).

26 Second, Plaintiffs repackage their equal protection argument as a due process 27 claim, alleging that certain provisions of ICWA “violate the substantive due process 28 rights of children with Indian ancestry, and those adults involved in their care and upbringing who have an existing family-like relationship with the child.” Compl. ¶ 99. But, as discussed supra Section IV.A, ICWA is based on an Indian child’s political affiliation, not her ancestry, and does not violate the guarantee of equal protection.

Moreover, in claiming that ICWA violates the rights of foster parents, Plaintiffs seek application of a right not previously recognized. Extensions of due process protections are quite rare, as “[t]he doctrine of judicial self-restraint requires [courts] to exercise the utmost care whenever [courts] are asked to break new ground in this field.” Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 302 (1993) (internal citations omitted). The Supreme Court has, in any event, made clear that foster parents do not have an established constitutionally protected liberty interest in the continuation of their relationship with foster children. See, e.g., Smith v. Org. of Foster Families for Equality and Reform, 431 U.S. 816 (1977) (declining to recognize foster parents’ constitutionally protected liberty interest).¹³ Foster Parent Plaintiffs have no protected liberty interest at issue here.

Third, Plaintiffs allege that “the failure of ICWA as applied by the BIA Guidelines to adequately consider the child’s best interests deprives the class of plaintiff children of liberty without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment.” Compl. ¶ 100. Again, Plaintiffs are asking this Court to fashion a new fundamental right that neither the Supreme Court nor the Ninth Circuit has recognized. The Supreme Court has, instead, stressed that “best interests of the child,” while:

a proper and feasible criterion for making the decision as to which of two parents will be accorded custody. . . . is not traditionally the sole criterion – much less the sole constitutional criterion – for other, less narrowly channeled judgments involving children, where their interests conflict in varying degrees with the interests of others. . . . [I]t is likewise not an absolute and exclusive constitutional criterion for the government's exercise of the custodial responsibilities that it undertakes, which must be reconciled with many other responsibilities.

Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. at 304.

Furthermore, Plaintiffs are incorrect as a matter of law in alleging that decisions made pursuant to ICWA regarding removal of a child from her home, termination of parental rights, or foster or adoptive placements do not take into account the child's best interests. To the contrary, children and parents share a "vital" interest in preventing the erroneous termination of their natural relationship, Santosky, 455 U.S. at 760, and ICWA provides federal standards to protect this right. And, ICWA itself is "based on the fundamental assumption that it is in the Indian child's best interest that its relationship to the tribe be protected." Holyfield, 490 U.S. at 50 n.24 (citing Pima Cnty., 635 P.2d at 89). Moreover, ICWA's foster- and adoptive-placement preferences all specify that the state court may deviate from the preference where there is "good cause to the contrary," 25 U.S.C. § 1915(a), (b). This permits a court to consider a child's particular circumstances, although it does not provide unfettered discretion to ignore the statutory preferences. Thus, to the extent that Plaintiffs have a liberty interest in the consideration of their "best interests," ICWA protects this interest.

C. Plaintiffs' Claim that ICWA Exceeds Congress' Authority Must Be Dismissed Because It Understates the Breadth of the Indian Commerce Clause and Because ICWA Does Not Violate the Tenth Amendment

Count Four alleges that ICWA exceeds Congress's power under the Indian Commerce Clause ("ICC")¹⁴ and asserts that ICWA commandeers state resources and "displaces inherent state jurisdiction" over state child-welfare proceedings in violation of the Tenth Amendment. Compl. ¶¶ 111, 113. This claim relies on a cramped interpretation of the ICC and an overbroad interpretation of the Tenth Amendment that finds no basis in law. It is well settled that Congress has "plenary and exclusive"

¹⁴ Outside its header, Count Four makes no explicit allegation that ICWA exceeds Congress' power under the ICC.

1 authority to legislate in the field of Indian affairs. United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 2 200 (2004). The Supreme Court has recognized this broad authority of Congress since 3 the early 19th century, emphasizing that:

4 [the Constitution] confers on congress the powers of war and peace; of 5 making treaties, and of regulating commerce with foreign nations, and 6 among the several states, and with the Indian tribes. These powers 7 comprehend all that is required for the regulation of our intercourse with 8 the Indians. They are not limited by any restrictions on their free actions.

9 Worcester, 31 U.S. at 559 (emphasis in original). Just a few years prior to the passage 10 of ICWA, the Supreme Court recognized again the “plenary power of Congress to deal 11 with the special problems of Indians . . . drawn both explicitly and implicitly from the 12 Constitution itself.” Mancari, 417 U.S. at 551-52. Thus, the central function of the 13 ICC, U.S. CONST. Art. I, § 8, cl. 3, “is to provide Congress with plenary power to 14 legislate in the field of Indian affairs.” Lara, 541 U.S. at 200 (citing cases).

15 Congress’ authority in this area, however, is not drawn solely from the ICC. The 16 plenary authority also derives from the President’s treaty power, U.S. CONST. Art. II, § 17 2, cl. 2, which “has often been the source of the Government’s power to deal with the 18 Indian tribes.” Mancari, 417 U.S. at 551. The Supreme Court has also recognized that 19 Congress’ power in this area stems from “the Constitution’s adoption of 20 preconstitutional powers necessarily inherent in any Federal Government . . .,” Lara, 21 541 U.S. at 201, as well as the federal government’s assumption of a trust obligation 22 toward Indian tribes. Mancari, 417 U.S. at 552; Cohen’s Handbook of Federal Indian 23 Law § 5.01, at 383-91 (Nell Jessup Newton ed., 2012).

24 Plaintiffs assert that “a child with Indian ancestry is not an item of commerce.”
 25 Compl. ¶ 110. However, Plaintiffs confuse the ICC and the Interstate Commerce 26 Clause, which have “very different applications.” Cotton Petroleum Corp. v. New 27 Mexico, 490 U.S. 163, 192 (1989). “The extensive case law that has developed under 28 the Interstate Commerce Clause . . . is premised on a structural understanding of the unique role of the States in our constitutional system that is not readily imported to 1 cases involving the Indian Commerce Clause.” Id; see also United States v.

 2 Lomayaoma, 86 F.3d 142, 145 (9th Cir. 1996) (noting the distinction between principles 3 of federal Indian law and “those governing federal regulation of interstate commerce.”).
 4 As a result, limitations on Congress’ authority to legislate through powers derived from 5 the Interstate Commerce Clause do not transfer to the ICC. Nor is Congress’ Indian 6 affairs power limited to the geographical confines of Indian lands or reservations or 7 Indian people on these lands. United States v. Holliday, 70 U.S. 407, 417-19 (1865).

8 Accordingly, the standard of review of congressional enactments pursuant to the 9 ICC is “that the legislative judgment should not be disturbed “[a]s long as the special 10 treatment can be tied rationally to the fulfillment of Congress’ unique obligation toward 11 the Indians” Delaware Tribal Bus. Comm. v. Weeks, 430 U.S. 73, 85 (1977)
 12 (citing Mancari, 417 U.S. at 455); Perrin v. United States, 232 U.S. 478, 486 (1914)
 13 (“[I]n determining what is reasonably essential to the protection of the Indians, 14 Congress is invested with a wide discretion, and its action, unless purely arbitrary, must 15 be accepted and given full effect by the courts.”). As discussed in Section IV.A supra, 16 in enacting ICWA, Congress relied on its plenary authority over Indian affairs under the 17 Constitution and the United States’ trust relationship with Indian tribes. See 25 U.S.C. § 18 1901. Pursuant to these authorities, the United States sought to protect the integrity and 19 resources of Indian tribes, none of which is “more vital” than their children. 25 U.S.C.
 20 § 1901(3).¹⁵ Both the text of ICWA and its legislative history reflect reasoned and 21 justified federal substantive and procedural requirements aimed at protecting Indian 22 children and tribes. Id. § 1901(3); H.R. REP. NO. 95-1386, at 12-19 (discussing 23 Congress’ authority to enact ICWA). Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim that ICWA

24 ¹⁵ Such a finding only highlights the difference between enactments pursuant to the ICC
 25 and enactments pursuant to the Interstate Commerce Clause. With the latter, the Court 26 is careful to ensure Congress does not overstep its bounds by legislating matters 27 properly left to the States. But the sovereign rights and interests of Indians do not 28 typically align with those of the States; instead, they rely upon federal legislation to protect and advance their interests. See Cotton Petroleum, 490 U.S. at 192-93.

1 exceeds the bounds of Congress' plenary authority under the ICC.

2 In Count Four, Plaintiffs also allege that ICWA violates the Tenth Amendment, 3 but ICWA neither "impermissibly commandeers state courts and state agencies" nor 4 displaces "inherent state jurisdiction" over state child-custody proceedings. Compl. ¶¶ 5 110, 112. "If a power is delegated to Congress in the Constitution, the Tenth 6 Amendment expressly disclaims any reservation of that power to the States; if a power 7 is an attribute of state sovereignty reserved by the Tenth Amendment, it is necessarily a 8 power the Constitution has not conferred on Congress." New York v. United States, 505
9 U.S. 144, 156 (1992). Here, the Constitution expressly grants Congress authority over 10 Indian affairs, and given that Congress passed ICWA pursuant to this enumerated 11 power, the Tenth Amendment is necessarily not implicated. New York, 505 U.S. at 156;
12 Gila River Indian Cmty. v. United States, 729 F.3d 1139, 1153-54 (9th Cir. 2013); Raich
13 v. Gonzales, 500 F.3d 850, 867 (9th Cir. 2007); United States v. Jones, 231 F.3d 508, 14 515 (9th Cir. 2000) ("We have held that if Congress acts under one of its enumerated 15 powers, there can be no violation of the Tenth Amendment."). Thus, while it is true that 16 the Supreme Court has recognized that domestic relations are the province of the States, 17 Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393, 404 (1975), the Supreme Court has also long recognized 18 that States "have been divested of virtually all authority over Indian commerce and 19 Indian tribes." Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 62 (1996); 20 Worcester, 31 U.S. at 560-61. ICWA is fully within Congress' Indian affairs authority, 21 and does not violate the Tenth Amendment.

22 Moreover, ICWA does not violate the anti-commandeering principle of Printz v.
23 United States, 521 U.S. 898 (1997), and New York. The principle is not implicated 24 when federal directives apply to state courts, as Congress possesses the power to "pass 25 laws enforceable in state courts." New York, 505 U.S. at 178; Testa v. Katt, 330 U.S.
26 386, 390-91 (1947). The Supremacy Clause establishes that "judges in every State shall 27 be bound" by federal law. U.S. CONST., Art. VI. Therefore, state courts must hear 28 ICWA cases as they would hear any other dispute arising under a federal statute.

1 Maricopa Cnty., 828 P.2d at 1245 (“The Act does not deprive a state of its traditional 2 jurisdiction over an Indian child within its venue; it establishes ‘minimum federal 3 standards and procedural safeguards designed to protect the rights of the child as an 4 Indian and the integrity of the Indian family.’”) Count Four should be dismissed.

5 D. Plaintiffs Have Failed to State a First Amendment Claim

6 Federal Defendants’ conduct does not impose an undue burden on Indian Child 7 Plaintiffs’ associational rights. Plaintiffs erroneously contend in Count Five that Indian 8 Child Plaintiffs are suffering from “forced association,” “have virtually no connection to 9 the tribes” and “are forced to associate with tribes and tribal communities . . . contrary 10 to their best interests.” Compl. ¶¶ 116-18. There is no basis to assert that an Indian 11 child’s enrollment in or relation to an Indian tribe under ICWA violates her 12 associational rights.

13 Membership in a federally recognized Indian tribe, or being born the child of a 14 member of such a sovereign entity, is not a forced association. ICWA does not require 15 association, but rather protects associations that already exist.¹⁶ Plaintiffs’ comparison 16 to Boy Scouts of Am. v. Dale, 530 U.S. 640, 653 (2000), where the Supreme Court 17 recognized an organization’s right to exclude individuals is, therefore, inapposite. As 18 discussed in Section IV.A supra, ICWA was “adopted to serve compelling state 19 interests, unrelated to the suppression of ideas, that cannot be achieved through means 20 significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms.” Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 21 U.S. 609, 623 (1984). Accordingly, Count Five should be dismissed.

22 ¹⁶ ICWA’s enactment reverses the “wholesale separation of Indian children from their 23 families,” H.R. REP. NO. 1386, at 9, and protects intimate association as well as the 24 existing communal and political association between the children and the tribe. A 25 sovereign tribe is capable of protecting a child’s interests because the tribe, like the 26 states, has a compelling interest in intervening in child-custody proceedings when a 27 child’s life or health is endangered by her parents’ decisions. See Jensen v. Wagner, 28 603 F.3d 1183 (10th Cir. 2014). The tribe also has closer ties to the children than the proposed “next friend” because the children are members of or the offspring of members politically affiliated with the sovereign tribe.

V. Plaintiffs' Administrative Procedure Act Claim Fails Because the Guidelines Are Not Final Agency Action

Plaintiffs' Count Six should be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. That count, brought pursuant to the APA, asks the Court to hold unlawful and set aside Sections C.1 through C.3 of the Guidelines. Compl. ¶¶ 121-23. The APA authorizes judicial review of "final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court." 5 U.S.C. § 704. Plaintiffs shoulder the burden of demonstrating final agency action, Grand Canyon Trust v. Williams, No. CV13-8045, 2013 WL 4804484 at *5 (D. Ariz. Sept. 9, 2013), and cannot do so.

In order for agency action to be final, it must (1) mark "the consummation of the agency's decision making process," and (2) "be one by which rights or obligations have been determined, or from which legal consequences will flow." Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 178 (1997); see also Or. Natural Desert Ass'n v. U.S. Forest Serv., 465 F.3d 977, 982 (9th Cir. 2006). With regard to the second prong, the Ninth Circuit looks to "whether the [agency action] has the status of law or comparable legal force, and whether immediate compliance with its terms is expected." Ukiah Valley Medical Ctr. v. F.T.C., 911 F.2d 261, 264 (9th Cir. 1990); see also Fairbanks N. Star Borough v. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 543 F.3d 586, 591 (9th Cir. 2008) (no final agency action where agency action "did not impose an obligation, deny a right, or fix some legal relationship") (internal quotations omitted).

The Guidelines are advisory in nature, providing state courts and child-welfare agencies best practices for interpreting and implementing ICWA. See 80 Fed. Reg. 10,146 ("These updated guidelines provide guidance to State courts and child welfare agencies implementing [ICWA].") (emphasis added). As a "statement of the agency's opinion" on what ICWA requires and how it may best be interpreted and implemented by state courts and agencies, the Guidelines, "can be neither the subject of immediate compliance nor of defiance." Fairbanks, 543 F.3d at 593-94 (internal quotations omitted). That is because they only "express [the Department's] view of what the law

1 requires . . . without altering or otherwise fixing its legal relationship” with Plaintiffs or 2 any other party. Id. at 594.

3 Nothing compels state courts, state agencies, or any other party to adhere to the 4 Guidelines. Indeed, in the thirty-five years that the 1979 Guidelines were in place, state 5 courts accorded them varying degrees of deference but did not find them binding.¹⁷ The 6 2015 Guidelines have thus far been treated no differently. See Oglala Sioux Tribe v.
 7 Van Hunnik, No. CIV. 13-5020-JLV, 2015 WL 1466067, at *14 (D.S.D. Mar. 30, 2015)
 8 (“The DOI Guidelines are not binding on the court but are an administrative 9 interpretation of ICWA entitled to great weight.”); In the Matter of M.K.T., Case No.
 10 113, 110, 6-9 (Okla. Civ. App. May 1, 2015) (rejecting the 2015 Guidelines’ 11 suggestions regarding good cause to deviate from ICWA’s placement preferences 12 because “[t]he BIA Guidelines are not binding and are instructive only”),

 14 P.3d 162, 173 (Alaska 2015).¹⁸

15 Unsurprisingly, a similar challenge to the Guidelines brought in the Eastern 16 District of Virginia was dismissed because, inter alia, the court concluded that the 17 Guidelines do not constitute final agency action. Order at 2, Nat’l Council for Adoption 18 v. Jewell, 1:15cv675 (E.D. Va. Sept. 29, 2015) (memorandum opinion to follow).

19 ¹⁷ See, e.g., People ex rel. M.H., 691 N.W.2d 622, 625 (S.D. 2005) (“[G]uidelines do 20 not have binding legislative effect.”); Adoption of N.P.S., 868 P.2d 934, 936 (Alaska 21 1994) (“The guidelines assist but do not bind this court.”); In re J.J.C., 302 S.W.3d 896, 23 used in interpreting ICWA); People ex rel. S.R.M., 153 P.3d 438, 441 (Colo. Ct. App.

 2006) (Guidelines are not binding but are persuasive).

24 ¹⁸ In fact, some courts have, subsequent to the 2015 Guidelines, continued to look to the 25 1979 Guidelines in interpreting ICWA’s requirements. See In re Interest of Nery V., 26 864 N.W.2d 728, 736 (Neb. Ct. App. 2015). And yet another state court used 27 suggestions from both the 1979 Guidelines and the 2015 Guidelines. State ex rel.
 28 Children, Youth & Families Dep’t v. Casey J., No. 33,409, 2015 WL 3879548, at *4 (N.M. Ct. App. June 22, 2015).

1 That result is not surprising. Other courts, considering comparable documents
 2 which, like the 2015 Guidelines, lack any express agency-enforcement mechanism, 3 have found no final agency action.¹⁹ Moreover, the fact that a state court might – 4 indeed, should – adopt the Guidelines and apply them in state-court proceedings cannot 5 transform the Guidelines into final agency action. In such case, it is the state court, not 6 the Guidelines, that fixes a legal relationship and establishes obligations as among the 7 parties before it. See La Jolla Friends of the Seals v. Nat. Marine Fisheries Serv., 630
 8 F. Supp. 2d 1222, 1232 (S.D. Cal. 2009), aff’d 403 F. App’x 159 (9th Cir. 2010) (“Even 9 assuming the state court relied upon [the agency] comments as if they represented a 10 final agency decision, this reliance would not convert [the agency] comments into final 11 agency actions reviewable under the APA or convert any adverse affect [sic] caused by 12 the state court order into federal agency action.”). Accordingly, Count Six should be 13 dismissed.

14 CONCLUSION

15 Plaintiffs lack standing to bring these claims, nor are they ripe, and the 16 Court thus lacks jurisdiction over this case. The Court also should abstain from hearing 17 these claims, given pending state-court proceedings. Finally, Plaintiffs’ claims fail as a 18 matter of law.

 22 ¹⁹ See BBK Tobacco & Foods, LLP v. U.S. Food & Drug Admin., 672 F. Supp.2d 969, 23 975 (D. Ariz. 2009) (no final agency action where “the FDA’s guidance documents do 24 not provide any legal basis from which the FDA can institute civil or criminal legal 25 proceedings”); Defenders of Wildlife v. Tuggle, 607 F. Supp. 2d 1095, 1111 (D. Ariz.
 26 2009) (no final agency action where “agency simply expressed its opinion as to what the 27 law requires, without altering or otherwise fixing any legal obligations or 28 relationships.”); Friends of Potter Marsh v. Peters, 371 F. Supp.2d 1115, 1120-21 (D.
 Alaska 2005) (“This guidance document has no legal effect, it merely summarizes what the agency believes the law to be. The guidance does not enforce an interpretation of the law.”).
